ABSTRACT

This Curriculum Guide for Guidance is an attempt to provide a structure for a Sequential instructional and information system in guidance. Upon implementation of these aspects of the guidance and counseling program within the school setting, individualized attention can be given to each student in meeting his unique needs, relating the acquired knowledge to his particular problems and plans, as well as filling the gaps with additional supportive assistance. This guide is designed specifically for the intermediate grades and provides guidance knowledge content in the areas of self-appraisal, occupational explorations, and educational planning. A curriculum task force has taken these three instructional areas and developed them into learning packets to meet the need for individualization of instruction. Each packet identifies a key idea to be learned along with a learning objective written in behavioral terms. Learning activities are suggested to the student for attainment of the objective. Outlines for discussion topics and group activities are also provided for the teacher. (RK)

FOREWORD

The Foundation Program for the Public Schools of Hawaii emphasizes the importance of the Guidance and Counseling Program as a basic component for meeting the unique needs of students. In its broad context, Guidance and Counseling include planned instruction, a broad array of sources of information, and a wide spectrum of services. The comprehensive nature of the Guidance and Counseling Program demands the involvement of the entire professional staff at the school level, professional counselors, teachers, and administrators; district support staff, including the recently-formed diagnostic teams; and the many other governmental and private resources.

This Curriculum Guide for Guidance is an attempt to provide a structure for a sequential instructional and information system in guidance. Upon implementation of these aspects of the guidance and counseling program, individualized attention can be given to each student in meeting his unique needs, relating the acquired knowledge to his particular problems and plans, as well as filling the gaps with additional supportive assistance.

A required semester's course in guidance, presently called "Career Development," is designated as an instructional offering at the intermediate level. Implementation of this course, beginning in 1972-73, will be dependent upon availability of funds.

This Guide has been developed under the direction of the Guidance Program in this Office of Instructional Services. It was prepared by a guidance curriculum task force at Jarrett Intermediate School, chaired by Mr. Herbert T. Imanaka, principal. This final copy represents a year of field testing at that school and includes constructive criticisms from teachers, counselors, and administrators to an earlier draft copy.

TO THE TEACHER

This Career Development Curriculum Guide for intermediate grades provides guidance knowledge content in the areas of Self-Appraisal, Occupational Explorations, and Educational Planning.

Research has shown that student maturation and development toward educational-vocational decision making, which does proceed in an orderly and somewhat predictable fashion, does not advance at the same rate for all students. Guidance is an area which blends well with the trend towards individualization of instruction.

A curriculum task force has taken major concepts in the three instructional areas and developed these into learning packets to meet the need for individualization of instruction. Each packet identifies a key idea to be learned along with a learning objective written in behavioral terms. Learning activities are suggested to the student for attainment of the objective. Each packet suggests a quest activity for students who may be motivated to study a topic in greater depth.

Although the students spend more than half of their time working on packets of their own choosing, of no less importance are the discussion activities. Outlines for discussion topics are provided in this guide to assist the teacher in this phase of classroom instruction. Suggestions for the conduct of small group discussions are found in the appendix section.

Any effort to individualize instruction calls for an instrument to diagnose and assess student achievement level and progress. For this purpose a pre and post course test was devised and made a part of the appendix section in this guide. The appendix also contains a form used by the students to chart their own progress in this class.

OVERVIEW OF THE GUIDANCE PROGRAM

Definition of Guidance

"Guidance is that part of the total educational program designed to foster maximal development of individual potentials through providing school-wide assistance to youth in the choices, decisions, and adjustments each must make as he moves toward maturity."¹

Goal of Guidance

Guidance seeks to help the individual to: 1) Achieve personal success physically, emotionally, and socially, and 2) Achieve academic success and success in educational and career planning.

General Objectives of Guidance²

The major categories of guidance objectives are indicated below and relate to the primary guidance developmental needs of students - educational, vocational, and social.

1. Perceptualization Objectives - The development of knowledge and skills in and awareness of selected aspects of the environment and self, needed by the individual in making educational, vocational, and social decisions and in coping with the demands of his school and social environment.
 - a. Environmental Orientation - Knowledge and understanding of educational, vocational, and social opportunities, requirements, and expectations.
 - b. Self Orientation - Knowledge and understanding of abilities, limitations, identities, feelings, and motivations relevant to educational, vocational, and social development.
2. Conceptualization Objectives - The process of analyzing relationships, making predictions, evaluating consequences, and taking action relevant to educational, vocational, and social goals. The emphasis is on action based upon relationships between perceptions of self and perceptions of environment.
 - a. Directional Tendencies - Formulation of choices, decisions, and plans which the individual is expected to make in ordering the course of his educational, vocational, and social growth. Development of interests and value attachments in moving towards these goals.
 - b. Adaptive and Adjustive Behavior - Development of ability and skills to cope with environmental conditions and in the solution of problems arising from the interaction of the individual with his environment. Adaptive behavior refers to ability to manage and control environmental conditions while adjustive behavior refers to individual ability to modify behavior to meet environmental demands.

²From Frank E. Wellman, Criteria Variables for the Evaluation of Guidance Practices, A Taxonomy of Guidance Objectives, 1969, Columbia, Missouri, University of Missouri, Mimeographed.

3. Generalization Objectives - The development of a behavior pattern which shows consistency, commitment, effectiveness, and autonomy.
 - a. Accommodation - Ability to solve problems and cope with environmental demands with consistency and minimum conflict.
 - b. Satisfaction - Individual's adjustment, choices, decisions, and plans are congruent with his personal adequacy, expectations, and his perceived ideal life style.
 - c. Mastery - Congruence of individual's expected or predicted achievement with actual achievement.

Description of Guidance

Guidance is a program of school-wide assistance to all students and is developmental, beginning in the kindergarten and extending through high school. The assistance provided to students is not a single or a special event in the student's school experiences. Rather, guidance is continuous, sequential, and cumulative assistance.

Developmental guidance is primarily concerned with the full development of potentials of each student and with fulfillment of his normal developmental tasks and needs. Secondly, it focuses on remediation and prevention.

Guidance cannot be carried on solely by specialists in guidance. It is a cooperative team effort of administrator, counselor, teacher, and support personnel. The classroom teacher, being in daily contact with students, serves as a first-level counselor. The counselor provides specialized counseling assistance to the student and consultative support to the teachers.

The guidance program consists of guidance instruction and information and counseling on an individual or group basis.

To develop the total individual, the Guidance Program provides information and instruction to all students concerning their physical-mental health-social development and their educational-career development. This information and instruction is further supported with counseling services for all students utilizing school and community resources. Thus, through a program of instruction and counseling services all students are helped to integrate the intellectual, emotional, physical, and social aspects of their personality, to adjust to one another, to adults, and to the environment, to achieve academically, plan adequately for the future, and carry out formulated plans.

The guidance instructional program is conducted by classroom teachers as an integral part of the instructional program through formal guidance courses or by integration into the on-going academic curriculum. The counselor supplements classroom guidance instructional activities with scheduled guidance informational activities through small and large group discussions.

SUGGESTIONS
SMALL GROUP DISCUSSION

"Students talk about everything except the subject" is the usual comment by teachers who try to have small group discussions in the classroom. Another comment frequently heard is "Trying to get students to speak is like pulling teeth." The above two remarks often uttered by teachers in despair describe two opposite situations involving "discussions." Yet, the two situations are caused by similar circumstances. Consider the following factors which may help towards more effective small group discussions:

1. Having Something Interesting to Talk About

The reason that discussion group may bog down or get out of hand is not that students don't have anything to say. In fact, they have a lot to say, but if the topic is of no interest and relevance to them, they would either refrain from speaking or talk about other things. The teacher could create an interest by relating the topic to students' experience; it could refer to a minor aspect of the topic, but then students may feel involved. Sometimes the discussion could be started with a question that will jolt them out of their lethargy or apparent disinterest. The how and the kinds of questions asked are important factors to consider.

2. Knowing the "how" of Holding Discussions

Many a time small discussion groups break down because of the students' lack of knowledge in conducting themselves in small group discussions.

Instructing students to get into groups and to discuss the topic may not be sufficient for many of them. Perhaps, at the beginning, students need to have a more structured type of lesson in holding discussions. They need to understand (or at least review) their roles in the small groups. (The teacher may be in jeopardy if he assumes that they already know this.) This process of effective participation in small groups may take a long time for certain students. A printed material on their roles (see "Roles and Responsibilities") may be needed and referred to occasionally.

3. Group Make-Up

At the beginning the teacher will not know his students and will assign students to groups by some method or another. However, as the teacher learns more about his students, he will begin to see leaders, potential leaders, followers, goof-offs, and which students can't get along with others. Students can be cruel to each other and will shun someone in a group they don't like. Teachers must look for clues such as this and take the initiative to place students accordingly.

There are various kinds of groups that the teacher should experiment with:

- a. Same sex
- b. Mixture of boys and girls
- c. Students' own choice of groups
- d. Students' choice of groups according to topics interested in
- e. Teacher-assigned groups
- f. Shy ones together; talkative ones together

Reminder: Only 5 to 8 students in a group;
8 is absolute maximum.

4. Explaining Directions and Instructions

It is important that the teacher gives clear explanations before having the students go into small groups. The purpose of the groups, the length of time allowed for the discussion, and what should be accomplished should be clearly understood by students.

5. Preparing Guidelines

Until the students are experienced in holding effective group discussions, it might be well if the teacher provided the groups with guide questions. In fact, many students need these guidelines in order to conduct themselves properly. The students may also be instructed that they could add to the guide questions, if feasible. The teacher should be going from group to group in case help is needed for clarification, explanation or even to help get a group started.

6. Locating and Formation of Groups

It is better to form circles than to sit in a rectangular position to assure that everyone can face each other and for fuller participation. The various groups should be a reasonable distance apart to prevent interruptions and disturbance.

7. Social Courtesies

Students often need to be reminded that in effective human relationship, they must be courteous and open-minded no matter how much they disagree or dislike another. This is not to be construed that they must accept the opinions of others, but they should respect their right to voice them. They must try to understand the frame of reference for other attitudes, feelings, values, and opinions. Also, students must be willing to change their opinions, decisions, and judgment in the light of reliable and valid evidence.

8. Evaluating Group Discussions and Participants

Every once in a while it would be a good idea for students to evaluate each other as participants in a group. Some questions to be considered for such a task are:

- a. How effectively did we work?
- b. Did we accomplish what we set out to do? Why or why not?
- c. Was the leader a good leader?
- d. Did all members of the group participate?
- e. Did the teacher help when help was needed?
- f. See "Group Evaluation Form."

on
SUBJECT OF HUMAN NEEDS
(Refer to form--"Satisfying Human Needs")

The following small discussion group activities are based on the form "Satisfying Human Needs" (see form that follows). The below listed activities are some activities which may help to arouse interest and offer relevant topics for discussion.

1. Pass out the form without the needs identified and have students fill in the needs. Have a class discussion of the list, writing the needs of each item on the board to see how many agreed and disagreed or identified different needs. Then have small groups assigned to certain items and choose the best student-identified need and list their reasons for the choices.
2. Pass out the form and, as a class, identify needs. Form groups, each group taking items identified under one particular need. The purpose of the group is to see whether other needs can be identified for the items and the reasons for such identification.
3. State to class "Going steady is a destructive experience!" or ask "Is smoking marijuana a destructive experience?" Divide into small groups (same sex) and have each group take an affirmative or negative stand to teacher's statement or question. Or, have mixed groups (boys and girls) discuss the teacher's declaration or question.
4. Assign several items of the form to the various groups and ask each group to give reasons for the situations (items of the form) or have students select groups according to the situations.
5. Have students select one of the items and make up a story. Be sure to tell students that the stories will be shared the next day. Have students' paragraphs or stories printed and each group assigned to several. Have the groups identify the needs as implied by the stories.

6. Have students research item of their choice as to the why of each and later form groups for sharing of information and questions.
7. Students in small groups could identify the items under constructive and destructive experiences and their reasons. Or, have boy-groups identify the experiences that may be destructive and girls identify the experiences which they consider may be constructive. Then, form mixed groups (boys and girls) for comparison and debate.
8. Give each group a need and have the group identify other experiences (like the items of the form) that would be caused by the particular group-assigned need.

To Students:

According to the school policy, the purpose of the progress report (report card) is to give you an idea of your development in relation to what you are capable of doing in a particular subject. The PASS/FAIL rating will be used this year; however, you will have the opportunity to choose either the Pass/Fail rating or the regular letter-grade (A,B,C,D,F) rating. You will be rated according to your decision, with your parents' approval.

Dear Sir:

In my intermediate school Guidance course we are exploring various occupational fields related to our own self-appraisal of our abilities, interests, and aptitudes. This vocational study is to help us in our educational planning for high school and post-high school education.

I would very much like to visit with you and/or your company on _____ (date) _____, at _____ (time) _____, or any other date and time which can be suitably arranged. An observation of the actual world of work would be beneficial and of great value to me in my educational planning. I would greatly appreciate it if such a visitation could be arranged for me.

Thank you for whatever assistance you can provide me.

Sincerely yours,
